Edgar Rice Burroughs has startled the world with his amazing stories of the Jungle and of the planet Mars, but of all the astounding yarns he has written, At The Earth's Core is far and away the most marvelous and fascinating. David Innes and his inventor friend, when they sought to test the practicability of their "subterranean prospector" made an amazing discovery. The two men pierced through the Earth's crust and found a world, with living, breathing, functioning humans and animals, but a world still in the Stone Age. The hairbreadth escapes of the two men, the weird monsters encountered, the touch of romance and the manner of telling make this one of Burrough's very best.
