In this season of economic uncertainty, radio talk-show host Bob Lonsberry shares a touching true story for everyone who has hills to climb and burdens to bear.

"This is the story of my first-grade Christmas, the year my mother told me we weren't going to have Christmas, because we couldn't afford it. This is the story of her pain and my hope, and how it all turned out. More importantly, this is a story of hard times, and how to handle those hard times. It is a reminder that no matter how bad things get, there are pearls along the way, bits of hope and light in an otherwise dark world. It is a reminder that we get what we choose to focus on -- the dark or the light, the sorrow of the joy.

There are no magic pills, no miraculous answers, there is just courage and faith, and the simple grit to go forward and count your blessings. This is a story for this Christmas of economic uncertainty, and for all of us who have hills to climb and burdens to bear.

This a story of hope and success, and I would be honored if you would read it."
