Handbook of European Intelligence Cultures (Security and Professional Intelligence Education Series)

National intelligence cultures are shaped by their country's history and environment. Regime type, threat perceptions, culture of secrecy, attitude toward peace and war, relationship between intelligence and political elites, military or civilian nature of intelligence, and many other factors, including the definition of intelligence itself, are all essential when searching for commonalities and differences between national cultures of intelligence agencies and communities.

Existing comparative surveys focus mostly on the American, British, and Russian cases and largely remain restricted to these and the UK/USA countries. As so much has already been published on the major Western services, there is a need for information on intelligence communities elsewhere. This handbook intends to fill this gap in the literature by focusing on the smaller European national intelligence organizations.

Featuring 32 countries (such as Albania, Belgium, Croatia, Norway, Latvia, Montenegro), the work provides insight into a number of rarely discussed national intelligence agencies to allow for comparative study, offering hard to find information into one volume.

The contributors, which are all experts from the countries discussed, were asked to address the intelligence community rather than focus on a single agency. They all followed the same framework, looking at the environment in which an organization operates, its actors, and cultural and ideological climate, to cover both the external and internal factors that influence a nation's intelligence community. The result is an exhaustive, unique survey of European intelligence communities rarely discussed.
